

Brain technologies: A brave new world?

The 2017 BNA Christmas Symposium
Monday 18th December 2017, London

With the technological revolution well under way, the field of neuroscience is changing forever. The latest neurotechnologies are allowing us to view, manipulate and replicate the nervous system in ways we never thought possible.

In this symposium, leading experts will explore how neurotechnology is shaping both neuroscience research and the wider world around us; from the emergence of nanomedicines in disease treatment to prosthetics that can be controlled by the mind. The day will be concluded with a discussion panel on the ethical implications of this fast-moving field.

BNA Christmas symposia are heralded as one of the most popular events in the neuroscience calendar. Having established a reputation for lively and inclusive programmes they attract a wide range of professionals (university researchers, clinicians, psychiatrists, teachers and neurologists) across all career stages: high school students to retired professors. Last year's event sold out two months in advance and we anticipate high interest in this year's event as well.

This year's meeting will be held in South Quay in Canary Wharf, London – a unique waterfront location with great views of the Docklands quarter and the O2. It's a few minutes from South Quay DLR, and a short walk from Canary Wharf underground station. We expect ~280 delegates to attend this exciting one-day event and would love your organisation to be a part of it. As well as contacting delegates on the day you will also be reaching the 2000+ BNA members via advertising of the event in our newsletters, printed publications, social media and email updates.

Sponsorship and exhibition opportunities are now available. If you would like to discuss alternative options please do not hesitate to contact the BNA office (office@bna.org.uk, 07584 016279). Secure your space now by completing the booking form on the last page.
